8-8-2016

Insightful experience at GenHERation discovery days

Sarah Gardner
Dominican University of California, sarah.gardner@dominican.edu

Dave Albee
Dominican University of California, david.albee@dominican.edu

---

Survey: Let us know how this paper benefits you.

Recommended Citation

https://scholar.dominican.edu/news-releases/87

This News Release is brought to you for free and open access by the Communications and Media Relations at Dominican Scholar. It has been accepted for inclusion in Press Releases by an authorized administrator of Dominican Scholar. For more information, please contact michael.pujals@dominican.edu.
Insightful experience at GenHERation discovery days

BFA student Erin McKay ’18 recently gained first-hand insight into how her degree in the arts would help open doors to the corporate world.

Erin, who is enrolled in the Alonzo King LINES Ballet BFA program at Dominican, spent the day meeting with female executives at some of the country’s most innovative companies as part of GenHERation Discovery Days. These immersive day trips are organized by interactive media company GenHERation to give female students a behind-the-scenes look at top companies while participating in skill-building simulations.

Erin’s agenda included IDEO, Twitter, Sephora, and Adobe.

“It was an incredible day,” recalls Erin. “This was a rewarding opportunity to meet strong, problem-solving, and motivated women.”

Her key takeaway: Your life does not always follow the path you planned for it to take.

“Earning a degree in the arts does not limit you in the business world; it strengthens you,” Erin says.

Erin’s observations are echoed by a survey conducted by the Association of American Colleges & Universities showing that employers favor liberal and applied learning for college students. Nearly all employers (93 percent) surveyed agreed that for career success, “a candidate’s demonstrated capacity to think critically, communicate clearly, and solve complex problems is more important than his or her undergraduate major.”

Among the inspirational women Erin met on the tour was a Manager of Programs and Business Operations on the Adobe Research team whose university degree focused on singing. Today she is both a leader at Adobe and an opera singer in San Francisco.

“She never took a computer science course. Instead, she was confident, well-spoken, a quick learner, and her own self-advocate,” says Erin. “Women can have it all: a family and a fulfilling career.”

In addition to her work in the BFA, Erin is serving as a delegate to College Debate 2016, Dominican's national voter education initiative. After attending planning sessions at Dominican this past June, a nationwide network of student delegates have spent the summer posting, tweeting, sharing, and snapping the issues that matter most to young voters.

In September, the College Debate 2016 delegates will gather for the College Convention in order to share their work and create the College Debate 2016 Platform. The Platform will list issues that resonate with college students and need to be addressed by the next president and other elected officials. After articulating their Platform, delegates will participate in a CD16 Town Hall to determine the topics they want the candidates to discuss at the presidential debates in September and October.

Erin’s top issue focuses on education in the United States.

“The K-12 public education system fails to ensure diversity and to support immigrant, minority, marginalized, and poverty-level students," she says. "Many students who hoped to attend college settle for and simply accept futures without further education. In order to unlock a thriving society, high-aspiring, well-informed, and critically thinking citizens are essential."