The Dance of My Body

By Elizabeth Claverie

The dance of my body

is deceiving—

it is needling up and down as fast as it can,
pulling in fabric and pushing it out again speeding, humming the starts and stops of bits of songs—
breaking thread, pausing only long enough to be refreshed then the treadle is spurred on to even more fabric to mend, bind and piece and the day moves on.

but—
deepest in a crease
in a dark linty furrow the moves are slow and deliberate.

my arms undulate in the warm breeze stretch like flexing willows bowing and waving.

my legs leap and hold themselves in mid-air twirling in waves of wind my hair pirouetting in swirls in a slow motion dance in 4-4 time of swimming in clouds and falling into dreams.
